Here and There

—Editorial By ALEX. H. WASHBURN—

THE comedy team of Wheeler & Woolsey appeared at the Saenger last week-end in what I supposed to be their newest motion picture. I am an ardent theater fan, and never having seen mention of this picture I presumed it was merely another case of Hope getting a new production before the big cities did. Then I saw the picture, and I knew why I hadn't seen it advertised elsewhere—it was too dirty.

"So This Is Africa" was advertised as:

"A riot of fun, gags, song and dance!"

But it was a blue day when the Malco booking office permitted this crude and vile picture to go out to its audiences in 26 cities.

For it hastens the time when the theater will be returned to the bondage of censorship.

X X X

I am no hypocrite.

I saw "So This Is Africa," and I laughed.

But I could laugh freely and still padlock the joint.

Let's be reasonable about this. What individual men do, so long as it doesn't interfere with others, is largely their own business. But what they do in public, and particularly what they offer as public entertainment, is not only not their private business but is sharply limited by good taste.

This is not merely the law of civilization. It is the hand of tribal custom, reaching out from the dim past, and planted more deeply in men's hearts and instincts than any written law you or I know of.

There are ten written commandments—but the eleventh is known even among savages who never heard of the Jewish-Christian Bible:

Be decent in public.

X X X

I am no hypocrite.

I do not see that what any man does or says "off the record" has anything to do with his stand in public.

I can understand why a city as famously wicked as New York is supposed to be, doesn't hesitate to padlock a burlesque house.

I can understand how a New York cop steps out of a saloon without his conscience bothering him, and walks across the street to close up a theater.

Not everybody can get into a saloon.

X X X

The motion picture theater is America's entertainment-center. It advertises that everybody is welcome. And everybody goes there, to laugh, to cry, to be enthralled by action, and inspired by noble sentiment.

That in this same cathedrally-beautiful building I once wept over Lionel Barrymore and young Phillips Holmes and pretty Nancy Carroll in "Broken Melody," the story of a French soldier who sought out the family of the German boy he killed.

And from the same screen, in the same building, echoed the rotten lines of "So This Is Africa."

What's happened to Wheeler & Woolsey? Why, they turned out a picture full of smoking-car gags, and the studio was afraid to release it. Big city theaters would have been padlocked had they shown it.

So this film was shoved off like some gaunt wolf to linger furtively in small-city theaters where, here today, gone tomorrow, it would evade the police.

The Star apologizes for permitting this picture to be advertised in its columns.

No advertisement of any Wheeler & Woolsey film will be accepted by this paper in the future.

The Star doesn't believe in state censorship. That is stupid.

The right way to attack a million-dollar picture studio is to refuse publicity to actors who debauch public entertainment. This attack is sure. The studios lose the exhibition rights to stars in whom fortunes have been invested.

An eminent Smithsonian scientist, Dr. Hugh M. Smith, has seen "daddy-long-lages" in such numbers as to make the surface of the earth seem in motion as they scurry along. His observations were made in the mountains of northern Siam.

General Johnson Snubs This State on Airplane Visit

IGNORES GREETINGS

Committee Cools Its Heels While Great Man Smokes a Cigarette

LITTLE ROCK — A big Curtiss-Condor biplane bearing Gen. Hugh S. Johnson, head man of the NRA, settled down on Municipal Airport Monday noon, and a group of Little Rock notables who had been waiting for an hour or more stepped forward to extend greetings and shake the hand of the Great Man.

The pilot cut the twin motors, steps were placed at the cabin door, the Reception Committee members ducked their heads against the crisp November wind and cleared their throats, newspaper reporters crowded forward to catch every word, and photographers tinkered with their equipment.

Nothing happened.

After a while the pilot bustled out, strode past the greeters without looking at them, and conferred with the airport manager, Joe Young. Members of the Reception Committee and newspapermen shuffled about uncertainly a moment, then Wallace Townsend, president of the Chamber of Commerce, approached the pilot and asked if General Johnson would be getting off [illegible]

"Nope," said the pilot.

No Luck Here

Whereupon the newspaper reporters approached the cabin door with intent to beard the NRA lion in his den. But an army sergeant blocked the way.

"You can't go in," he said in a that's-that voice.

"Will you ask General Johnson if he'll see the press for a moment?"

"Can't do it," he said.

Meanwhile, Mr. Townsend had persuaded the pilot to return to the plane and ask General Johnson if he would permit the Reception Committee to see him for a few moments while the ship was being refueled.

"I don't know if it'll do any good," said the pilot doubtfully, "but I'll ask him."

He vanished in the cabin and closed the door after him. Several minutes passed, while the abashed committee waited in the wind.

"Oh, to Hell with him," said one of them, "and you can quote me to that effect," he added to the newspaperman.

Attention at Last!

After a while the door opened, and the general's secretary, Miss Frances M. Robinson, appeared.

"The president of the Chamber of Commerce may come in," she announced. "And the man in the uniform," she added.

Mr. Townsend mounted the steps, followed by Maj. Lee V.Casey of the state Military Department.

"Here's the state chairman of the NRA," said Mr. Townsend, indicating C. E. Moss, "and the governor's secretary," pointing to Grady McCall. "Could they go in, too?"

Miss Robinson reluctantly consented and the quartet vanished into the plane's cabin. They returned in two minutes.

The general said hello and said he wasn't feeling well," Mr. Townsend reported. "I asked him if he would see the press a minute, or at least step to the door and pose for a photograph. He said. 'No, I won't do it.' "

The ship was at the airport a half-hour and General Johnson could be seen walking about in the cabin, smoking a cigarette, but that was the only view of himself that he permitted.

Another Not Talkative

Edward F. McGrady, assistant administrator for labor, and assistant secretary of labor, emerged after a while with Miss Robinson, and a Gazette reporer asked him if he would give some massage to the people of Arkansas in view of the administrator's indisposition.

"I have nothing to say," he answered curtly, without pausing in his walk, "nothing at all to say."

The fortunate four rejoined the other members of the committee and they all retired to the airport restaurant where they ate the light lunch that Mr. Moss had ordered in honor of General Johnson.

Among the rebuffed were: Harvey G. Combs, secretary of the state Democratic Central Committee; City Attorney Linwood L. Brickhouse, representing Mayor Knowlton; D. Hodson Lewis, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce; Grover T. Owens, NRA chairman for Little Rock; Julian Blass,

City Septic Tank Cleaned, Removing Mosquito Menace

Hope Spends $500 Removing Earth That Had Been Washed in

ON SPRING HILL ROAD

Plans Made to Screen Fulton Road Unit With Hedge or Vines

A prolific source of mosquitoes was believed removed from the southwest quarter of the city last week-end when the city government completed the overhauling of the municipal septic tank.

A crew of laborers costing the city $500 spent three weeks removing earth which had come in through loose joints in the sewerage system, and nearly filled the big concrete tank just off the Spring Hill highway inside the city limits.

Manager George Sandefur, of the water and light plant, reported that the accumulation of earth had partially blocked chemical action in the septic tank, and when the laborers removed the manhole covers from the tank swarms of mosquitoes appeared.

Hereafter, he said, the city plans to overhaul this part of the sewerage system at regular intervals.

Although the public generally supposes the septic tank is located west of the city on the Fulton paved highway, this is not the fact. The tank is on the Spring Hill road, where solids are settled out, and water is conveyed through a pipeline to the filter-bed on the Fulton road, where it is purified before being released into the creeks draining into Red river.

The filter-bed on the Fulton road, however, is more of a nuisance as regards odors, than the septic tank; and a plan is under way to at least hide the filter-bed from the sight of tourists by erecting a screen of hedge or creeping vines between it and the Fulton highway.

Bank Lawyers Up to Hal Norwood

Purkins, Nominee of Banking Department, Apparently Out

LITTLE ROCK—(AP)—Appointment of attorneys for insolvent banks or building and loan associations in Arkansas hereafter will be made by the attorney general instead of the State Banking Department, it was indicated Monday when Chancellor Dodge signed an order confirming the appointment by Attorney General Hal L. Norwood of J. H. Carmichael as attorney for the liquidating agent of the American Exchange Trust Company.

Mr. Carmichael has been chairman of the Depositors Committee of the institution.

Chancellor Dodge last week wrote to Mr. Norwood advising him that a vacancy as attorney for the American Exchange liquidator had existed since the resignation of Sam Rorex in June, and he recommended appointment of Mr. Carmichael. Judge Dodge called attention to a section of Act 14 of 1933, which provides that the attorneys shall be appointed by the attorney general, subject to the approval of the Chancery Court of the county in which the insolvent institution is located.

For several weeks after the Rorex resignation, legal affairs of the American Exchange liquidator were handled by the firm of Trieber & Lasley, attorneys for the Banking Department.

About three months ago, DuVal L. Purkins, former secretary to Governor Futrell, who opened a law office in Little Rock soon after he resigned as the governor's secretary, was appointed attorney for the bank by the Banking Department.

The appointment was never approved by Judge Dodge. The last quarterly report filed in Chancery Court by Sam J. Wilson, liquidating agent, showed one payment to Mr. Purkins of $150 for 15 days' work.

Mr. Purkins said he had received two months' salary, or $600 from the bank, but that when Judge Dodge questioned his appointment, he asked Mr. Wilson to make no further payments until the matter was settled. He said that "it is purely a matter between Judge Dodge and Mr. Wasson," and that he was involved "only incidentally."

Mr. Purkins said he did not know whether any of the payments to him had been approved by Judge Dodge, but he was "inclined to think they were not."

Mr. Norwood said Monday night that when his attention was directed to the matter by Judge Dodge, he offered to appoint Mr. Purkins, since he already had been designated attorney by the Banking Department, but that the proposal was not acceptable to Judge Dodge.

Austria Warned by United States

Will Lose American Sympathy If She Adopts Nazi Program

VIENNA, Austria — (AP) — United States Minister Earle issued a warning here Tuesday that American sympathy for Austria would be immediately forfeited if this country goes anti-Semitic.

While Austria thus far has resisted Gearman Nazi propaganda, with the aid of the conservative Chancellor Dolfuss, fears are expressed that ultimately she will be driven into annexation by Germany.

Austro-German unity is a dream of many years standing, Teutonic blood being an important strain among Austrian peoples. Amalgamation was talked in the days of the German Bismarck, and was revived after the defeat of the Central Powers in the great war.

When Austria, threatened with international chaos after the war, appeared likely to join Germany, it was Italy and France and Great Britain who helped finance a stable government, now headed by Chancellor Dolfuss.

But union with Germany still appears the most likely thing should the Dolfuss government fail, and union under present conditions would mean embracing of the German Nazis' creed, including persecution of the Jews.

Hard Coal Miners on Outlaw Strike

Meat Packers Return to Work After Seizing Minnesota Plant

WILKES-BARRE, Pa.—(AP)—Marching on the meeting place of their union officials, about 2,500 striking anthracite miners of the Panther Creek valley Monday declared they would ignore an order to return to work immediately.

A few hours earlier local union officials had announced the Panther Creek valley strike had been discontinued and the general mine committee would discuss workers' grievances with operators Tuesday.

The strikers, waiting in the rain in Coaldale, refused to hear an emissary bearing the order to return to work, and stormed union headquarters in Lansford.

Workers demanded the operators pay a "consideration" wage—about 84 cents an hour and 10 cents higher than the "company" wage—for driving "chutes" to remove coal, and that the operators equalize work among all the Panther Creek collieries. Several of the workings have not been operated for more than two years.

Meanwhile, the Luzerne-Lackawanna fields renewed activity as members of the Anthracite Miners of Pennsylvania, rival of the Union Mine Workers of America, returned to work after a week's strike.

Two major industrial disputes were turned toward arbitration Monday.

Striking meat packers at Austin, Minn., who had held possession of the Hormel Company plant for two days, accepted the terms offered by Minnesota's Governor Floyd B. Olson and the differences were submitted to the State Industrial Board.

In the Southern Illinois coal war, progressive miners, out 16 months, transferred their claims to a federal court, which must decide whether strikers are entitled to 13,000 jobs they held formerly.

Former Hope Man Assistant to Byrd

Dr. Guy Shirey Second in Command on Antarctic Expedition

CONWAY, Ark—The Byrd Anarctic Expeditions, the latest of which is now preparing for departure from Norfolk., Va., have a special interest for Hendrix college because of the intimate connections of an alumnus, a freshman's father, and another's distant relative.

Dr. Guy Shirey of Texarkana, ex-1910, and Kenneth Railey of New York, now a freshman at Hendrix, are both, either personally or through close relationship intimately connected with the Byrd polar expeditions. Another freshman, Bobby Shirey of Camden, is distantly related to Dr. Shirey.

Kenneth Railey is the son of Capt. H. H. Railey of New York, business manager of Admiral Byrd's successful attempt to reach the south pole in 1929. Captain Railey is now director of the American League of Nations Association and recently returned to New York from the league conferences in Geneva, Switzerland. The possibility of his appointment as representative from this country in the event of the entrance of the United States into the League has been the subject of a recent news syndicate release. Besides being the business manager of Admiral Byrd's polar flight, Captain Railey also managed the first flight of Amelia Earhart, the Wilkins' polar expedition, and the unsuccessful transatlantic flight of Ruth Nichols. Mrs. Railey was formerly Miss Julia Houston of Pine Bluff. She has the distinction of being the founder of the boys' industrial home at Pine Bluff, and the author of a popular book, "Showdown."

Dr. Guy Shirey of Texarkana, who is second in command on the newest Byrd expedition, attended Hendrix from 1907 to 1910, and later was graduated from the University of Tennessee medical school. Since that time he has led an adventurous life, especially during the World war, when he was forced to serve in the German army until his release was secured with the aid of a congressman. After his release he entered the war with the first Texas expedition as a lieutenant and returned a major-general.

Dr. Shirey many years ago lived in Hope, his father also being a physician; and both will be remembered by the older citizens of the county.

Woodin Reported Planning to Quit Cabinet Saturday

No Conflict With Roosevelt, Simply Hasn't Recovered Health

ENDORESES POLICIES

WASHINGTON — Secretary of the Treasury Woodin came within a hair of making "an important announcement" Monday.

He was prevented only because it was such a banner day for the administration, with all the money and commodity markets behaving as the New Dealers thought they ought, and it would have been to bad, Mr. Woodin figured, to upset things with his "important announcement."

So he put it off until the end of the week. The secret, will be that Mr. Woodin is resigning.

Mr. Woodin has been angling for several months for a good opportunity to resign. His health has been such that he cannot continue to bear the burdens of being secretary of the Treasury, unless he chooses to sacrifice his health, or even his life.

Devoted to the President

While Mr. Woodin, through his devotion to his friend, the president, undoubtedly would rise to such heroism, his family is reported to have weighed heavily upon him with pleas that he retire.

Thoroughly modest, Mr. Woodin is convinced that the Treasury could safely be placed in other hands without danger to the republic.

In the immediate situation, however, with the president's monetary experiment in its infancy, and with almost any changing factor serving to alter its operations, Mr. Woodin is reported willing to defer his leaving until time and the stars may be propitious.

However, it is expected in informed quarters that Mr. Woodin probably will retire after the close of the markets at noon next Saturday. This would give the stock and garin markets, and the money markets over the world a full week-end to get over the shock of Secretary Woodin's resignation and appointment of his successor.

Three Classes Excluded

No credible infromation is available as to the sucessor, except that those familiar with the president's attitude believe that he will select a man of liberal thought in financial matters, one in sympathy with the Roosevelt views on monetary issues. It is deemed certain the president has excluded from consideration any who might fall in the classifications of: Bankers, financiers from Wall Street or La Salle street; politicians.

Unidentified Man Mangled by No. 8 West of Sheppard

Engine Within 100 Feet of Him Before Negro Is Sighted

BRING BODY HERE

Believed to Have Been Flagman on Fulton Extra Gang

An unidentified negro was killed about 11:30 o'clock Tuesday morning when struck by a northbound Missouri Pacific passenger train one mile west of Sheppard.

His death was being investigated Tuesday afternoon by railroad officials. Efforts to identify the body, which was badly mangled, were futile.

A railroad official said he believed the negro was a flagman on an extra gang, working out of Fulton.

It was thought the negro sat down by the tracks and had fallen asleep. The fireman on No. 8 said the engine was within 75 or 100 feet before the negro could be seen, and the engine couldn't be stopped.

The negro's body was picked up and brought to Hope.

Road Department Saves $900 Month

Operating Economy Enforced, and Purchases Are Competitive

LITTLE ROCK—Drastic cuts in the appropriations and consolidation of departments placing all purchases and responsibility of all equipment under a single head, has brought about a saving of $900 per month or [illegible] from February 1 to November 1, according to a statement by the State Highway Commission. Competitive bidding on purchases has effected additional savings exceeding $100,000.

The legislative act provides that the highway purchasing, which had been a separate department, be placed with the superintendent of equipment, and the State Highway Commission added to his duties and responsibilities the operation of the highway shop, or garage, exacting the savings mentioned.

This department purchases all machinery, equipment and supplies and distributes them to the various points throughout the state. The shop overhauls and repairs automobiles and equipment and is equipped for the more difficult repair jobs that cannot be repaired at the district garages. Approximately $600,000 of the annual appropriation for maintenance is expended through the department and in order to safeguard efficiency a requisition for all expenditures is required under the present system.

J. A. Francis, purchasing agent and superintendent of equipment and supplies, explained that no item regardless of size is purchased until a requisition has been issued showing the name of the party making the request as well as the purpose for which it is needed. Each item purchased is checked back against the original requisition before the invoice is approved for payment.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN Washington

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON.—Sitting alone out in far off Idaho, Big Bill Borah has put his finger on the most serious flaw in the NRA program.

In their hearts and in private conversation, some administration folk admit this. NRA has encouraged many manufacturers whose prices already were far above the general level to raise those prices even higher.

The trouble all along has been that prices of many products remained almost static through the depression, while farm prices and wage earner purchasing power were tobogganing.

Monopolies or combinations often kept high prices up. Among prices on the high side were those for farm implements, steel rails, aluminum, public utilities service and building materials.

The administration seeks to reduce the spread by raising the general commodity price level, now at 70, to that of 1926—100. Although the effort has been to bring low-priced commodities up, there is increasing talk about hammering some of the high-priced commodities down for a while.

Tus far it is only talk. But it involves such concrete suggestions as establishment of government corporations which would import competitive goods free of duty.

Rails Beaten Down

Steel rails were 93 per cent of the 1926 price when Roosevelt forced steel companies to reduce the ton price from $40 to $36.37 after they had bid $37.50 by obvious prearrangement on a deal involving a federal loan to railroads.

While farm products stand at 55.6 per cent of 1926 and the general level at 70.8, hides and leather products are 87.7, metals and metal products 82.4, and house furnishings 81.3.

Price increases between June, 1929, and June, 1933—just before the recovery program began operation—included electricity, gas, anthacite, plaster, matches and 22 other commodities. Cement, roofing tile, crushed stone and farm tractors were among 42 which went unchnaged.

Less than 10 per cent decreases included shoes, aluminum, harrows, grain binders, cultivators, threshers, pipe, men's overcoats and underwear, cigarets, roofing and plate glass. Less than 20 per cent: Plows, hoes, farm wagnos, automobiles, tires, cement, brick, and canned soup.

He Can Keep a Secret

Mrs. Tanya Drescher reported to police that a thief had jumped on her automobile running board and snatched her purse. She also reported that her husband, a secret service man, was in the car with her at the time.

One Dying Bite

To the consternation of the capital's perpendicular drinkers, who thought the cops had forgotten prohibition with repeal's approach, the city's two flashiest speakesies suddenly have been wiped out. They were the Club Mayflower and the Club Champlain.

Even the murals, disrespectfully caricaturing statesmen, were scraped off and carted out, along with bars, orchestra instruments, and gambling equipment.

Washington never did have a first-class speakeasy in the New York manner. There wasn't enough good trade. Few officials here ever quit drinking, but they set the fashion by carrying on in relative privacy.

A Way Out of An Inferiority Complex

There are two kinds of people in the world—those who belittle what belongs to them, and those who exaggerate the importance of their own possessions.

A woman will see a dress in a window that she feels she simply must possess. It is the prettiest dress she ever saw, her color, her style. She goes in, tries it on, buys it.

But just watch her the first time she wears it anywhere. "Oh, Mrs. Smith has on red," she says to herself. "Perhaps I should have bought red." Mrs. Jones has on brown, and Mrs. Clark white. Each dress is made differently from her own blue one. She begins to shrink inside herself. The dress so glamorous in the window begins to lose its assurance on her. It is hers. Therefore it lacks importance in her eyes. Her personality has extended itself to her dress because she thinks herself unimportant.

Feeling of Pride

Now Mrs. Clark may have bought her dress without caring much either way about what she got. But once on, its owner began to swell with glory. Mrs. Clark complacently surveys herself in the long mirror and decides she looks better than anyone else at the party. Mrs. Clark is always sure of herself; she respects and likes herself, therefore nothing can belong to her that isn't superlative. The old-fashioned furniture, the half-worn car, the poor pictures on her walls all have a certain halo in her eyes.

We always extend our personalities to our possessions. If we think that nothing of ours is important it is because we have a naturally inferior feeling.

Watch Child's Reaction

If a mother cannot decide whether or not her boy or girl has any deep respect or confidence in himself (or herself) she can learn, a world about him by watching his reaction to his own possessions.

As it happens, it does help some for the inferiority victim to get hold of something that indisputably is better than the other fellow's. Because just as surely as personality flows into a dress or a bicycle, it flows back the other direction too.

If there is a child in the family who has been getting the short end, it is wise to do the drastic thing for a change and buy him something far bigger and handsomer than his brothers'.

We cannot keep on buying and expecting dollars to pinch-hit for courage, but it gives one an idea of how to go about knocking Old Man Inferiority on the head. If we can, by hook or crook, encourage the underling to "show off" once in a while, it is a very good thing.

GLORIFYING YOURSELF

By Alicia Hart

©1933 BY NEA SERVICE INC.

Personal daintiness is one of the first requisites of immaculate grooming.

Consider your whole body and your clothes as well as your face and figure when you plan a winter beauty routine. Woolen frocks and steam heated rooms cause quite a lot of excess perspiration and you should bear that in mind constantly. Allow enough time for a daily bath, of course, and plan to use a good deodorant under your arms at least twice a week.

Woolen clothes need to be dry-cleaned frequently and they should be aired thoroughly several times between cleanings. Hang them in the sun, wrong side out, and leave them for a few hours.

Be sure that each dress has shields in it. This is important no matter how persistently you use deodorants. Remember to clean the shields each time you clean the dress and it's not a bad idea to clean shields oftener than that. Dip them in a little household ammonia and hang them in the sun to dry.

Fur collars need attention too. You can't keep your neck clean if you wear the same fur collar all winter without cleaning it at least once every two weeks. A rough bath towel and a bit of cleaning fluid will clean any fur collar and won't hurt the fur a bit.

Neck scarfs, either wool or silk ones, should be washed or dry cleaned often. In other words, be just as fastidious about your outer garments as you are about the lingerie which you wear next to your skin.

NEXT: More daintiness habits.

The UNKNOWN BLOND

By Laura Lou BROOKMAN

©1933 NEA SERVICE, INC.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

On a stormy November evening DAVID BANNISTER meets a pretty blond girl and offers her a lift in the cab in which he is riding. Her handbag opens and he sees a revolver inside.

Next morning Bannister reads that TRACY KING, orchestra leader in a movie theater, has been found dead in his apartment. Police are searching for an "unknown blond" who visited King the night before. Bannister, remembering the girl in the taxi-cab, is puzzled.

He sees her again that morning. The girl tells him her name is JULIET FRANCE and that she knows nothing of the murder. She is terrified and begs Bannister to help her. Against his better judgment, he agrees. Bannister urges her to tell the police her story but she refuses. Then she says, "I've got to go back there!"

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER V.

"You'll hear from me in an hour or so," he promised over his shoulder.

SHE saw at once that he had read something into her words that she had not intended.

"Please don't misunderstand!" she begged. "I—I tell you I don't know anything about what happened after I left. But I've got to get back into that room!"

"That's impossible," Bannister said brusquely.

"Oh, but there must be a way! There must be some way!" The gray eyes were almost black now. "Don't you see," she went on, imploringly, "it's my only chance? Otherwise they'll say I did it! They can arrest me—put me in jail! They might even prove that I—I killed him!"

"But you've assured me that you didn't," Bannister repeated. "Why can't you tell the police the same story you've told me? And I certainly don't understand why it's so important for you to get into that apartment."

"The police will return it to you."

"Oh, no!" The girl shrunk back, horror in her eyes. "I can't tell the police! I can't let them know. I thought you were going to help me. You said you'd do all you could—"

"And getting into Tracy King's apartment this morning rates as distinctly impossible. Don't you know there'll be police all over the place? They've been taking photographs, hunting for fingerprints, turning everything upside down. If you left anything there last night, rest assured it's been picked up by this time!"

"Oh, do you think so?" The girl's lips quivered and Bannister saw that she was near tears.

"Suppose," he said gently, "you tell me what it was you left there?"

"It was just—a paper."

"A paper?"

• • •

SHE nodded. "A paper that wouldn't mean anything to anybody else, only if the police got it—if they have it now—they'll know how to find me."

"It was a paper with your name on it?"

Again she nodded. "My name," she said, "and some other things. I think I wrote down Tracy King's telephone number. I didn't call it but I think I wrote it down—"

Her voice trailed away. A look of complete dejection had come over the girl. "If they've got it," she went on, as though to herself, "I guess there isn't any use. There wasn't any use of my coming—"

She seemed, to Bannister, infinitely pathetic then. She had shown spirit a few moments before, had seemed self-reliant.

"Listen," he said, leaning forward, "maybe it's not so bad as you think. Maybe there is something we can do!"

"But if the police know—don't you see? They'll find me here and they'll arrest me and take me to jail! And there isn't any reason for it! No reason at all! I can't tell them anything about who killed Tracy King because I don't know. Only they'll never believe me. They'll say I did it! Oh, I read the newspaper this morning and I've heard about the terrible things the police do. The third degree, it's called. They make people confess things they didn't do at all—"

Color had come back into her cheeks now, and some of the spirit she had shown before was in her voice.

"No," Bannister said firmly, "it won't be as bad as that. We'll get in touch with your friends—"

"I haven't any friends," she told him slowly. "There's no one—no one at all."

• • •

SHE saw the look of surprise in his eyes. Impetuously she added, "It's good of you to offer to help me. I know that all I've said must sound terribly queer! I suppose if somebody else told me such a story I wouldn't believe it. Only it's true—all that I've told you. There are some things I can't explain. I can't tell you why I happened to come to Tremont and why I had to find a job. I can't tell anybody. Even if the police ask I won't tell them!"

"I don't see why you're so terrified of the police."

"But—I've just told you! I haven't any friends and they'll know I went to see Tracy King last night. If you tell them about the revolver—"

"You don't have to worry about that!" Bannister said quickly. "They won't hear about it from me."

Her eyes raised gratefully. "I—I threw the revolver away this morning," she said.

"Threw it away?"

The girl nodded. "I saw a hamper of soiled linen in the hallway and I dropped the revolver down under some sheets."

"But that was the worst thing you could do!" Bannister exclaimed, dismayed. "Someone is sure to find the gun. They'll trace it to you—"

The girl looked startled. "Oh!" she said. "Do you think so? I hadn't thought of that. I—I just wanted to get rid of it!"

There was a moment's pause. Then the girl said slowly, "I guess it doesn't matter much. I guess they'll be here pretty quick to get me anyhow." The gray eyes were helpless again. "If I could have managed to get—that paper it would have been all right. I could get some other clothes somehow. This morning I thought you were going to tell them about the gun, but if you didn't there wouldn't be any reason at all for them to arrest me. I could make myself look different. I could get some other clothes and—oh, dye my hair or something. Only if they've found that paper—"

• • •

BANNISTER spoke up then. He knew that he didn't believe the story Juliet France had told him. He didn't believe she had come to Tremont to hunt for a job or that she had gone to Tracy King's apartment to ask him to hear her sing. He couldn't believe her story about the revolver either. Why, he didn't even know whether or not her name was Juliet France! Nevertheless, he wanted to help her. Juliet France—if that was her name—was in a tough spot. He didn't like to think of a girl who looked like that facing Oliver McNeal and Steve Fisher and the relentless grilling they would give her.

"Listen," Bannister said, "you said that was just a piece of—well, scratch paper. A sort of memorandum?"

She nodded.

"Well, maybe I've been wrong about all this. There's a possibility—just a chance in a million, but still a chance—that the boys might have missed it. They could have picked it up, thought it didn't amount to anything and tossed it into a wastebasket. I don't say they would, but then again they might! If there was only some way to find out—!"

"There must be!" she exclaimed eagerly. "Oh, there must be a way! Couldn't we go tonight—after it's dark? Couldn't we manage it somehow?"

Bannister shook his head. "Maybe I can think of something," he said, and once more was surprised at himself. What crazy sort of stunt was he letting himself in for? Conniving with a girl wanted for murder, aiding and abetting a criminal. But he wasn't! This girl couldn't be guilty of the horrible crime she was sure to be accused of. Whoever she was, whatever she had done, David Bannister was convinced of one thing. She wasn't a murderess.

And she certainly was in grave danger. Bannister was amply acquainted with the ways of the law to know what a few hours of brutal questioning, accusation and threats would do to the flimsy story the girl had told.

There must be some way to help her, must be something he could do.

He looked at the girl again and said, "I don't know what we can do but I'll try to find a way to get into that place. You'd better go to your room and wait until you hear from me. Maybe I can scout around a little. Find out how the wind lies—"

He walked with her to the elevator, then took his leave. "You'll hear from me in an hour or so," he promised over his shoulder as he turned to go.

Twenty minutes later he entered Jim Paxton's office.

Never once since the world began,
Has the sun ever stopped shining;
His face very often we could not see,
And we grumbled at his inconstancy.
But the clouds were really to blame,
not He,
For behond them he was shining.
And so—behind life's darkest clouds:
God's love is always shining;
We veil it at times with our faithless fears.
And darken our sight with our foolish tears,
But in time the atmosphere always clears,
For His love is always shining.

NEW ORLEANS, La.—(AP)—Amid hoots and catcalls from spectators, Edward Rightor, counsel for former Senator Broussard and Francis Williams, New Orleans political leader, Tuesday were cited for contempt of the special senate committee investigating the election of Senator Overton.

New York State Bans Old Saloon

Liquor Restricted to Restaurants and State-Licensed Stores

ALBANY, N. Y.—(AP)—The old-time saloon and its bar are ruled out in New York state under an experimental liquor control plan announced by the state's "A. B. C." Board.

After repeal New Yorkers may buy their Martinis only in bona fide hotels, restaurants, clubs, dining cars and ships. The only restaurants permitted to sell drinks are those which can prove that most of their receipts come from the sale of food.

Sale of bottled liquor for off-premises consumption was restricted to state licensed retail liquor stores—a modification of the Quebec plan. Neither groceries nor any other kind of store can sell liquor or wine. The only exception is in the case of large groceries which have room to set up an exclusive wine and liquor division, it was explained, and drug stores which can sell a half-pint of liquor or a quart of wine on prescription.

The state will collect 25 cents in tax on each quart of liquor sold, 10 cents a quart on sparkling wines, and 10 cents a gallon on still wines.

"Not like others"

"That good taste you're talking about is the 'seasoning' of Turkish Tobacco—

"I HAPPEN to be one of the men who buy Turkish tobacco for Chesterfield.

"Our men live in Constantinople, Samsoun, and Smyrna in Turkey; and Cavalla, Serres, Xanthi, and Patras in Greece. The best known Turkish tobaccos come from these sections, and we try to select the best grades for Chesterfield.

"There is no other tobacco just like Turkish—it has a taste and aroma all its own. Chesterfield seasons them just right.

Masefield's Latest Bok Is a Fine Tale of the Sea
BY BRUCE CATTON

"The Bird of Dawning," by John Masefield, is a straight-away story of the sea, written by a past master at the job; an almost unbelievably good tale of the gorgeous ship era, worthy of a place on your shelf between Melville and Dana.

The opening page puts us aboard the clipper Blackgauntlet, racing up through the Atlantic to London with a cargo of tea from China, spreading sail for every puff of wind, in the hope of beating the half-dozen other clippers that sailed from China at the same time.

A steamer strikes the ship in a fog and vanishes. The Blackgauntlet promptly sinks, and one boatload of men, commanded by the young second mate, gets away. The rest go to the bottom.

Then follow days in an open boat in a howling gale. The boat leaks, the water supply turns out to be salty, food is scarce, the nearest land is 700 miles away. Then, just as the men are giving up all hope, they come upon another of the clippers, the Bird of Dawning.

The ship, sound and seaworthy, has been abandoned in mid-ocean, her skipper, a dour religious fanatic, having gone suddenly daft and taken to the boats with all hands.

So the survivors board the ship, work her, short-handed, to London, win the great tea race and set all England talking.

That's the story. As a tale of pure adventure, it is breathlessly exciting; as an authentic picture of an unutterably romantic era, it is something that no lover of sea stories can afford to miss.

Published by Macmillan, it sells for $2.50.

In addition to being a crack ball player and an unusually able manager, Terry is a good business man. His associates in the oil business are confident that when his baseball playing days are over Terry will carve out for himself a very successful career in the world of business.
